

Brandeis Center Welcomes Two New Legal Fellows

Washington D.C, October 14, 2016: The Louis D. Brandeis Center for Human Rights Under Law (LDB) is pleased to welcome two new Civil Rights Legal Fellows to the staff, Hana Ma and Rachel Leach. LDB is a national non-profit civil rights legal advocacy organization committed to combating anti-Semitism in higher education.

LDB's President & General Counsel Kenneth L. Marcus commented, "We are pleased to welcome our new team members, who join at a time when anti-Semitism is on the rise on a national scale and their skills will be put to good use. We are confident they will add to our growing list of legal accomplishments."

Hana Ma is a recent graduate from Harvard Law School's LLM program, during which she joined the Israel trip organized by HLS Jewish Law Student Association. Before Harvard, Hana practiced as a dispute resolution lawyer in Shanghai with a premier Chinese firm and studied in Beijing and Oxford.

Hana majored in law and English as an undergraduate student and became very interested in a variety of legal topics such as cross-border insolvency law, U.S. constitutional law and international humanitarian law. She was awarded China Oxford Scholar at Oxford and F.Y. Chang Scholar at Harvard, and is committed to inter-cultural exchanges and learning.

Rachel Leach is a recent graduate of The George Washington University Law School. During law school, Rachel interned for At-Large Councilmember Elissa Silverman and the D.C. Coalition Against Domestic Violence. Through her legal internships, Rachel has worked on several policy issues such as limiting employment discrimination and identifying the intersection of domestic violence and homelessness within the District. Prior to attending GW Law, Rachel attended Arizona State University and graduated with a B.S. in Political Science and minored in Religious Studies.
